Following the JFK Assassination Trail

The history-changing assassination of President John F. Kennedy remains one of the most intriguing mysteries of our time, and it happened right here in our own backyard. Most people are familiar with the Sixth Floor Museum, the site from which Lee Harvey Oswald fired the deadly shots, but there are many other places in the area also associated with the assassination that are just as important. Most of these are completely unknown to the casual observer and are unmarked as to their importance in the event, but they are vitally important to understanding better what happened that day.

$74 per person

Our tour will be escorted by JFK assassination expert Andrew Moyer, a resident of Dallas since 1961 with a clear recollection of that November weekend. He is thoroughly conversant with the personalities and circumstances which shaped the entire episode. Under his direction this tour will address the full sequence of events that historic day in Dallas which forever changed the history of the nation and the world.

Following the JFK Assassination Trail Itinerary:

On this one-day excursion, we will follow the “trail” of the assassination events to see recognizable sites, areas less familiar and some key places completely unknown to the casual observer, such as:

- Dealey Plaza, where the assassination took place.
- The Turtle Creek house where Oswald attempted unsuccessfully to assassinate Ret. Gen. Edwin Walker in April, 1963, prior to the attack on Kennedy.
- The Oak Cliff rooming house where Oswald was living in November, 1963, after a series of address moves and a mysterious trip to Mexico that fall.
- Parkland Hospital where President Kennedy and Governor John Connally were taken, where the President died, and where Oswald himself would be taken within two days of the assassination.
- The basement tunnel at the Dallas Municipal Courts Building where Jack Ruby killed Oswald on live national television.
- The place in Oak Cliff where Oswald killed Police Officer J. D. Tippit.
- The Texas Movie Theater a few blocks away where Oswald later fought with police and was captured.
- The Dallas Trade Mart where Kennedy was slated to make his speech.
- The house in Irving where Oswald’s wife Marina was living apart from Oswald at the time, the focus of the best-selling book Mrs. Paine’s Garage, which proposes an interesting solution to the mystery.
